May it please Your Excellency,

Sir, the mayor, aldermen, and commonalty of the city of London, in common assembly, beg most respectfully to address Your Excellency, and the council of the city, for the reason of the mutual tie of friendship and loyalty, to avoid any misapprehension of the opportunity your excellency's most affable manner of renewing our most respectful expressions of our deep attachment to our beloved sovereign and her illustrious house.

It is not without some feeling of satisfaction we beg permission to inform your excellency of the gradual advance in prosperity, which through a self-reliant spirit of enterprise and unceasing industry, has characterized this city for many years, as manifested by a steady annual increase in the value of property, which has doubled within a period of twenty years.

Within our streets we point out your excellency the small space occupied by the ancient city of London, as it appeared before the brave defenders of our days of old, and, looking from these time-honored halls, your excellency will perceive the noble factories, the handsome streets of St. Martin-le-Grand, the public institutions, the connections with manufactures, and the streets of well-built houses, which have changed our city from a small garrisoned town to an extensive commercial and professional community, anemporium of inestimable wealth, whose inhabitants have been enabled to manifest, in every monetary view, the same spirit of independence and firmness, as did their fathers in the great constitutional struggle of years gone by.

We regret we cannot detail all the internal improvements, and proclamations, on the state and prosperity of our country generally, portions of which have been so much disturbed and disturbed by incursions and destruction. We trust the laws of the land, aided by the more strenuous measures which her Majesty's government have lately adopted, may prove more effectual in the suppression of crime and bloodshed, and the restoration of peace, confidence,
Harmony, and goodwill between fellow men. I do sincerely hope it may be your excellency's privilege, during your period of office, to effect these great benefits and blessings, and that, upon its termination, your excellency may be enabled to point to a happy and contented people, and a prosperous country, as the result of your excellency's rule and government.

Their excellencies the lord lieutenant and colonel Spencer were met at the appointed hour by the mayor and other members of the corporation and officers in official robes at the lower door of the corporation hall, and attended by the sword and mace bearers and sergeants-at-arms proceeded to the assembly room.

The mayor having introduced their excellencies, the lord mayor read the foregoing address which was presented to their excellencies by the city council and sealed with the city seal.

The lord lieutenant then read and handed to the mayor the following reply.

Mr Mayor and Gentlemen,

You justly prate your desire upon the loyal attachment to the Queen and her illustrious house, which your ancient city has frequently evinced, and you solicitation for a representative in Parliament, I put great emphasis upon, thanking you for the renewal of those expressions of devotion, that Shanly, also warmly appreciated, your cordial welcome to Londonderry.

The steady advance of spirit, industry, wealth, and prosperity, of which you give me so remarkable evidence, is the result of that self-sacrifice and industry which have long distinguished this part of the United Kingdom.

That spirit which animated the defenders of your city in former days has now, in happier and more peaceful times, a wide field for useful development, and I rejoice at seeing, in the fine buildings and great public works which are springing up within and outside your city walls, the happy proof of your increasing prosperity.

I now address to the general state of the Country
Country, and I admit, with regret, that, though through material wealth increasing through Ireland, there are some districts in which there has been a serious renewal of the lawlessness, and crime, which have from time to time been obvious on the streets of this country.

The found in the temperate administration of the measures which our Majesty's Government has felt obliged to introduce in order to check these great evils, unless I am not only in the belief for repression in the localities where it is more applicable, but may ordure the necessity for their further extension.

There are difficulties connected with the Government of Ireland, which have differently affected different parts of the country, and even within the prosperous regions, you are not yet completely free from the traditional jealousies which in former times divided those of different religious persuasions. I sincerely trust that the good sense of the people, to which I would fearlessly appeal, and the sacrifices furnaced with which the Government desires to treat any regard all objects of the Queen, whatever their religious beliefs may be, and successfully and greatly discourage these differences, and that in the future years we shall see the making way for a worthy combination to promote the moral and material welfare of the country.

The Council then proceeded.
